Certification leads to higher job satisfaction among IT professionals and greater confidence in their ability to do their jobs compared to their uncertified peers.1

More confident, knowledgeable, and reliable employees

Confidence & Knowledge

89% of employers think IT-certified individuals tend to perform better than non-IT-certified individuals in similar job roles.2

Effective cost savings & staff turnover:

70% of employers believe IT certifications provide long-term savings for the organization.1

81% of IT professionals say that maintaining their IT certification keeps their skills and knowledge current.1

Lower staff turnover:

75% of employers believe certified employees are more likely to stay with their organization than non-certified IT staff.2

89% of employers believe that certifications are important for team performance.3

70% of employers believe IT certification helps in hiring the right person for the job.4

93% of hiring managers believe that certifications are beneficial.5

Confidence & knowledge make a great first impression with employers and can help a job candidate land an interview. Certifications also provide leverage for employees seeking a promotion as they send a clear message that the employee has mastered concepts and technologies required for the credential, and possesses the initiative and drive to gain the skills needed.

Career progression, earning power, and more

Career progression:

91% of employers believe that certifications are a key step in their career path and therefore provide better opportunities for career advancement.6

92% of employees said IT certification makes them more competitive in the job market, whether or not their company requires it.7

Job satisfaction:

Certification is key to higher job satisfaction among IT professionals. 8 Among surveyed and non-certified IT professionals, those who are certified are more confident in their ability to perform their job well and more likely to stay with their current company compared to their uncertified peers.1

Earning power:

68% of employees report that certifications have helped them in their job searches.8

93% of IT professionals believe that certifications are important for team performance.3

Certifications are used to assess one’s knowledge in a particular area and the benefits can include increased confidence in your ability to complete tasks and deliver quality results. Certifications can also be a part of personal or professional development, and can provide a competitive edge in the job market. Infor customers, partners, and employees are all eligible for certifications. Certification exams for each product line are role-based, including functional exams for consultant services, and technical exams for administration, installation, security authorization, and integration.

More confident, knowledgeable, and reliable employees

Confidence & Knowledge

89% of employees think IT-certified individuals tend to perform better than non-IT-certified individuals in similar job roles.2

Effective cost savings & staff turnover:

70% of employers believe IT certifications provide long-term savings for the organization.1

81% of IT professionals say that maintaining their IT certification keeps their skills and knowledge current.1

Lower staff turnover:

75% of employers believe certified employees are more likely to stay with their organization than non-certified IT staff.2

89% of employers believe that certifications are important for team performance.3

70% of employers believe IT certification helps in hiring the right person for the job.4

93% of hiring managers believe that certifications are beneficial.5

Confidence & knowledge make a great first impression with employers and can help a job candidate land an interview. Certifications also provide leverage for employees seeking a promotion as they send a clear message that the employee has mastered concepts and technologies required for the credential, and possesses the initiative and drive to gain the skills needed.

Career progression, earning power, and more

Career progression:

91% of employers believe that certifications are a key step in their career path and therefore provide better opportunities for career advancement.6

92% of employees said IT certification makes them more competitive in the job market, whether or not their company requires it.7

Job satisfaction:

Certification is key to higher job satisfaction among IT professionals. 8 Among surveyed and non-certified IT professionals, those who are certified are more confident in their ability to perform their job well and more likely to stay with their current company compared to their uncertified peers.1

Earning power:

68% of employees report that certifications have helped them in their job searches.8

93% of IT professionals believe that certifications are important for team performance.3

Certifications are used to assess one’s knowledge in a particular area and the benefits can include increased confidence in your ability to complete tasks and deliver quality results. Certifications can also be a part of personal or professional development, and can provide a competitive edge in the job market. Infor customers, partners, and employees are all eligible for certifications. Certification exams for each product line are role-based, including functional exams for consultant services, and technical exams for administration, installation, security authorization, and integration.